You Unfairly Or Inappropriately

• First make sure that the individual is really a law enforcement officer, by requesting to see a badge and/or identification card
• Make sure the officer(s) are at the correct residence. They should have a warrant, be actively investigating a crime, or be in “hot pursuit” of an individual suspected of committing a crime and running into your residence. If the officers do not have a warrant or are not in hot pursuit, you can deny them entry

If You Are Arrested

• You are entitled to know why you are being arrested
• You have a right not to make incriminating statements which might be used against you at a later time
• You are entitled to an attorney; Therefore, you should always have one

If You Feel That The Officer Treated You Unfairly Or Inappropriately

Innocent individuals are often offended and/or aggrieved as a result of being detained by an officer for questioning. Although the delay might be inconvenient, the officer is justified in his actions if he or she believes that there is a reason (reasonable suspicion) to stop you and ask questions.

Examples of reasonable suspicion might include questioning about a recent crime, someone placing a complaint about your clothing and/or physical description matches the description of a suspect and you decide to file a complaint, you can do so in a number of ways:

Statement on Racial Profiling

The Department of Public Safety is committed to the impartial enforcement of laws, University policies and Constitutional rights. Therefore, to emphasize these commitments and to ensure that all members of the Department engage only in constitutionally sound public safety practices, the Department prohibits the use of racial profiling in all of its interactions with the Columbia Community. Racial profiling is defined as the use of race, color, ethnicity or national origin as the determinative factor for initiating action. All interactions involving Public Safety personnel and those whom we serve will be conducted in accordance with the safeguards provided by the U.S. Constitution and University policies. Officers must be able to articulate the factors which led them to take action, in particular those factors leading to reasonable suspicion for stopping and questionning persons and for requesting identification from them. Officers are also reminded that the use of characteristics such as religion, age, gender, gender identity or sexual orientation as the determinative factor for taking action is prohibited.

While performing their duties, officers are reminded that this policy in no way precludes them from taking into account the reported race, color, ethnicity, national origin, religion, age, gender, gender identity or sexual orientation of a specific suspect in the same way the member would use pedigree information, e.g., height, weight, age, etc., about specific suspects.
A Welcome Message

From The Vice President For Public Safety
James F. McShane

On behalf of the men and women of Columbia University’s Department of Public Safety, I welcome you to our campus. As a member of the Columbia University community, you are about to enjoy a unique aspect of the Department of Public Safety and the services we offer, between the Department of Public Safety and the community we serve. Whether on campus or elsewhere, and to enhance communications and professional manner, as well.

We realize it is difficult to be calm when you feel you have been unjustly stopped or of officers. However, following suggestions have proven very helpful in ensuring that a police encounter does not escalate into a more serious incident. Remember always to:

- Maintain your composure
- Comply with any reasonable requests, particularly a request to produce appropriate identification
- Conduct yourself in a mature and respectful manner
- Avoid any action or language that might be deemed inappropriate or which might needlessly escalate the situation

If these suggestions are followed, there is a much greater likelihood that the encounter will conclude expediently and successfully with a minimum of stress to all of the participants. It is our hope that every encounter conducted in a courteous and respectful manner. These guidelines will facilitate that outcome.

Your Basic Rights and Responsibilities

If You Are Stopped by a Police Officer

Law enforcement officers are trained to explain to you why you are being stopped. In most instances, the explanation may not be offered until after they have received pertinent information from you. If you are stopped or detained by an officer and you have a question, you should politely ask the officer why you are being stopped. Don’t always assume that if you are stopped by an officer you are a suspect. The officer may simply be approaching you to have a conversation about an ongoing investigation. If the officer has a “reasonable suspicion” that you may be carrying a weapon, you may be subjected to a “pat-down” search. Officers are permitted by law to conduct a “pat-down” search for officer safety. In all cases, remember these key points:

- Be polite
- Stay calm: control your words, body language and emotions
- Answer all questions. Your answers should be factual and to the best of your knowledge
- Speak calmly
- Remember, you are not required to give testimony against yourself. You have Fifth Amendment rights, which protect you from incriminating yourself.
- Don’t argue, complain or “bad-mouth” the officer
- Keep your hands visible and refrain from using hand gestures
- Don’t touch the officer
- Don’t attempt to run or resist

We realize this is difficult, but it is necessary to ensure everyone’s safety during this stop. Please do not resist the search. Obey all requests made of you unless the request poses a risk to your personal safety or well-being. In that case, calmly ask the officer to request that his/her supervisor come to your location.

First Impressions

Remember, the first words of any encounter, whether spoken by the officer(s) or the student(s) involved, may well determine the tone of an encounter and even the eventual success of the outcome. Law enforcement, by its very nature, is both a difficult and dangerous profession. Many police officers are killed each year and even more are injured. Public Safety Officers routinely find themselves in situations with very little useful information and very little time to react to potentially life-threatening situations. Consequently, officers are routinely trained to place a great deal of emphasis on their safety and survival. This heightened sense of caution can sometimes create communication problems between officers and the public they serve. This communication gap can be even greater in a university environment.

At Columbia University, our Public Safety Officers have been trained and encouraged to interact with you in a professional manner and to treat you with respect. If you are stopped, questioned, or detained by a Public Safety Officer or other law enforcement official, it will help facilitate the encounter if you interact with him/her in a respectful and professional manner, as well.

In that case, calmly ask the officer why you are being stopped. In most instances, the explanation may not be offered until after they have received pertinent information from you. If you are stopped or detained by an officer and you have a question, you should politely ask the officer why you are being stopped. Don’t always assume that if you are stopped by an officer you are a suspect. The officer may simply be approaching you to have a conversation about an ongoing investigation. If the officer has a “reasonable suspicion” that you may be carrying a weapon, you may be subjected to a “pat-down” search.

We are doing this by adhering faithfully to our values of “Pride – Professionalism – Service.” We are also doing it by engaging everyone in the business of public safety. Safety is a shared responsibility and the Department of Public Safety’s highest priority is to help you develop tools to navigate any large, diverse urban community safely and easily. A key element in this strategy is to provide you with guidelines on how to communicate effectively and interact positively with members of the Department of Public Safety, as well as with other law enforcement agencies within our community, as well as in other urban settings.

To enhance communication, respect and trust between Public Safety officers and our community, we have prepared this brochure, “Your Rights & Responsibilities When Interacting With Public Safety Personnel at Columbia.” It is designed to increase your understanding of how best to respond if you are stopped by a Public Safety Officer, whether on campus or elsewhere, and to enhance communications between the Department of Public Safety and the community we serve. If you have any questions about this brochure or about any other aspect of the Department of Public Safety and the services we offer, please refer to the last page of this guide for a listing of Public Safety contact numbers, web site address, and contact information for various resource centers at Columbia University. If you have any comments or suggestions, you can register them by visiting our website at https://publicsafety.columbia.edu. You can also contact our 24 hour a day Operations Centers at 212-305-8100 on the Medical Center Campus or at 212-535-3301 on the Manhattanville Campus. We welcome your input!

Please remember that the Department of Public Safety is your safety resource at Columbia University. As such, you have my commitment that members of this Department will provide fair, equitable and professional services to every member of our community. We are committed to our values of “Pride, Professionalism and Service.”

If You Are Stopped On Campus By Officers

From The Department of Public Safety

The Columbia University Campus, although generally open to the public, is private property. As such, the University may restrict or deny access to anyone, particularly persons who are not affiliated with the University and those who have no bona-fide reason for being on campus. Access to this campus, like any other private property, is a privilege, rather than a right.

Naturally, those persons who are affiliated with the University are afforded great latitude across campus. It is for that reason that our Public Safety Officers will routinely ask persons for identification. In particular, they are authorized to determine whether or not you are a member of the Columbia Community. Therefore, when you are asked for your identification on campus, you have an obligation to provide it as a means of confirming your status and, consequently, your right to be on Columbia property. After you have produced your identification and verified your status, you are entitled to an explanation as to why you were stopped and questioned.

If You Are Stopped By The Police While Driving Your Car

- Slow down and pull over safely when you can. If the police vehicle is unmarked and you identify the driver as an unmarked police officer, drive below the speed limit to a well-lit, populated spot and then pull over.
- Stay in the driver’s seat with your hands on the steering wheel in sight of the officer. Do not try to exit your vehicle unless asked to do so by the officer.
- Get out of your car and do not attempt to run or resist. Officers are permitted by law to conduct a “pat-down” search for officer safety. In all cases, remember:

- Answer all questions. Your answers should be factual and to the best of your knowledge
- Speak calmly
- Remember, you are not required to give testimony against yourself. You have Fifth Amendment rights, which protect you from incriminating yourself.

Obey all requests made of you unless the request poses a risk to your personal safety or well-being. In that case, calmly ask the officer to request that his/her supervisor come to your location.

- Show your driver’s license, car registration and vehicle inspection decals to the officer. Officers should provide specific reasons for the stop before or after they have received your license and registration.
- If you wish to offer an explanation of your circumstances when stopped, do so before the officer returns to his vehicle. The officer cannot void a ticket once it has been written. If you believe you have been treated unfairly during this stop, ask to speak to the officer’s supervisor or follow the procedures at the end of this pamphlet that show you where and how to file a complaint with the N.Y.P.D.
- If the officer has “probable cause,” your car may be searched without a court-issued warrant. If you are the driver and/or owner of the car, you have the right to object to the search. To do so, you must immediately advise the officer of your objection.
